After researcher Mason Brooks invents a dream-the-future machine, he uses it to amass riches in stocks and gambling and to impress the young and comely Monica Westfield. But then he starts dreaming—and avoiding—his own death with increasing frequency. Death is seemingly imminent. The various lethal dreams share only one common component: the presence of a complete stranger, our unlikely hero, Paul Fontana. The two are linked in an enigmatic death dance. Desperate to solve the mysterious bond, Brooks invites Paul into his home. Throw in a gun, love interest, Sigmund Freud, and a prophetic golden bracelet, and things get interesting. This is déjà vu at its most devastating!
